Sherman has appeared before Savanash, having marched through the very heart of the South, taking its most populsus districts in his route, and he was comparatively unopposed. Hat the rebels not been utterly exhansted in their military perce, they would have interrupted him and made manifest their strength when such an opportunity offered. His triumphant sweep through the very vitals of trissons show that the rebelsion is but a shell—when broken in its exterior lines, it has no resisting power behind them. But Lee utill remains stubbornly and most skillfully defending the rebel capital. His sarmy is sailly depleted and dispirited, but it is still one of might and capable of fearful resistance. But it cannot withstand the embined armis which must soon close in around it. It may not be defeated in its streng discence; but its lines will be severed, and Bichmond and Virginia must fall before many months mules all human calculations prove deceptive. Sherman will take flowramash, and then his restless casegies will doubtless point to Richmond. Thomas has done his work well.
